Last September this year we got together ~~and~~ ~~the~~ quite literally deep underground ~~and~~ ~~celebrat~~ in a squatted metro tunnel of Amsterdam and celebrated our creativity. This document is the testament of that day serving not only for you to have a look into the past but also for us to reach into the future.

This day would not have been possible without the great artists that joined, supported and participated ~~xxxxxxx~~ It is this legacy, this collective like-minded attitude for this brief amount of time that united us and will serve as an inspiration forever and I hope I will be able to share with you.

I want the pictures taken at the event to speak for themselves but I will also include the setup, preparation and there is a video online as it's very hard to print video on paper.

I'd like to repeat a paragraph from Essential Modernities Special Amsterdam Edition, published in London in the summer of 2021:

"When dreams are bigger than yourself you need more than just yourself to accomplish them, an individual just won't cut it. There are roughly three options:

- 1) you can choose to abandon your dream
- 2) persuade someone else to abandon their dream and follow yours, either through inception or force
- 3) get lucky and find others with overlapping dreams"

Yes... I'm feeling lucky :)

Dear friends,

It is with great excitement that I'm officially inviting you to participate in the creation and celebration of our upcoming release of Essential Modernities: no. 6, the 2022 fall edition.

Some of you are long time contributors, others are new members to our network; regardless, we'll all be on equal levels with each other and the spectator of this new release as everyone is being included in the creation process.

The reason I'm asking you to join in advance is because I believe that together we can create the space and opportunity to realize everyone's potential. Also I want to provide for you a platform that you may use for your own ideals and beliefs. At the same time I think the combination of our individual philosophies will add up to a collective work that would be impossible to create alone.

As you can see we're already a pretty large group (and it's ever-expanding!), and everyone is working in different disciplines and in their own style. I want to invite you to experiment, to bring your practice to the floor and hope you'll find new things that will inspire you to continue your work, in any medium or way you like.

I've attached an info-sheet outlining the principles, but the actual content will be up to you. And all your questions and suggestions are more than welcome!

I'm looking forward to see what we're capable of together!

With love,

David

Rigid

A space, people, materials – that's it. It'll be focused on art (though, everything is art) but especially on the process of making, diffusing the border between creator and spectator.

Transcontinental

Essential Modernities is effectively a magazine, but at the same time a transcontinental network of like-minded artists. Since its inception it has operated on a global level, releasing every edition in a different city, working together with the local infrastructure and people we met on the way. This time Amsterdam will be our stage.

Multimedia Archival Document

We will create and present the works that appear in this edition in situ. The release party itself provides the content of the magazine that is being released. The emphasis is on the process and accessibility: the audience is also an artist and can join and make something on the spot, in turn the artists are spectators too. There will be a lot of trash turned treasure to work with but everyone is encouraged to bring their own. The goal is to create a relaxed atmosphere to experiment and exchange art, food and ideas. The whole thing will be documented and bundled in Essential Modernities 6.

Open & Free

Essential Modernities is open and free, in every sense of the word.
